Biography/History

Siegfried Wiesberger was the proprietor of the Peabody Book Shop, a fixture in the Baltimore intellectual scene in the first half of the 20th century, and a friend of many Baltimore writers, including H.L. Mencken. He was born in Bielitz, Austria in 1895, and came to the United States in 1912. After several years' travel in California and Hawaii, he began work at the Peabody Book Shop, under the management of his brother, Hugo, in 1922. In 1931, Hugo died, and Weisberger took over as the shop's owner. Having discovered H.L. Mencken's books at sale for a discount in a drugstore window in 1928, Weisberger sent the author a letter, suggesting his bookstore might be a more fitting place to show his wares. Mencken eventually agreed, and a lifelong friendship between the two men began, during which they shared their disdain for the shallow materialism of American culture. Weisberger sold the shop in 1954, declaring "the age of the boob is upon us," and retired to a farm in New Windsor, Maryland. He moved to Cambridge, Massachusetts in 1974, and died in 1984.

Henry Louis (H.L.) Mencken was a noted writer, editor, and social provocateur, famous for his disdain for common morals and received wisdom. Born in Baltimore in 1881, Mencken graduated from the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute at age 15, after which he worked days at his father's cigar factory and nights at the Baltimore Morning Herald. He became city editor of the Herald in 1903; and by 1906, he managed the Sunday edition of the Baltimore Sun. His theatre writing for the Sun led him to write George Bernard Shaw—His Plays, which won him the attention of New York literary circles and a position as literary critic for The Smart Set, the city's leading cultural periodical. From 1914 to 1923, Mencken also helped edit this magazine with his friend and fellow drama critic George Jean Nathan, with whom he later started The American Mercury, a cultural magazine which flourished for over a decade. In the 1930s and 40s, Mencken's social criticism fell out of favor, and his study of American English became the focus of his career. From 1919 to 1948, he published several editions and supplements to his linguistic work The American Language (1919, revised 1921, 1923, supplemented 1945, 1948). In addition, he wrote an autobiography in three volumes: Happy Days (1940), Newspaper Days (1941), and Heathen Days. Mencken was also known for his participation as a prosecutor in the Scopes Trial in 1925. He died on January 29, 1956, in the Baltimore row home where he had lived most of his life.

Scope and Contents

This collection includes material collected by Siegfried Weisberger, proprietor of the Peabody Book Shop in Baltimore Maryland. The collection is separated into three series. The first series contains correspondence between H.L. Mencken and Weisberger, as well as other correspondence concerning Weisberger's personal life and the day-to-day activities of the Peabody Book Shop. The second series contains autobiographical writing and poems by Weisberger, as well as a small number of receipts, lists, and photographs of authors from the Book Shop. The third series contains material related to H.L. Mencken, including manuscripts, published material by and about Mencken (much of it signed), and pictures of Mencken. More information is available at the series level.

Collection Inventory

SERIES I: CORRESPONDENCE, 1925-1954.

Scope and Contents note

This series contains correspondence from H.L. Mencken (as well as those writing on his behalf, including his brother, August Mencken, and his secretary, Rosalind Lohrfink) to Siegfried Weisberger. This correspondence is predominately professional, related to sales of Mencken's work at the Peabody Book Shop, but it also contains personal asides about Weisberger's personality and ideas, as well as their shared contempt for modern society. The series also includes correspondence received at the Peabody Book Shop, most of which is commercial in nature, though with personal touches; there are letters related to pursuing delinquent accounts, requests for rare manuscripts, and bemoaning the low state of the book trade. In addition, there are carbon copies and drafts of letters written by Weisberger to both commercial and personal correspondents, including Mencken. These carbons are often fragile.

CORRESPONDENCE FROM MENCKEN TO WEISBERGER, WITH SOME CORRESPONDENCE FROM AUGUST MENCKEN AND ROSALIND LOHRFINK.
